Regents mull over proposal for fine arts

Discussion also heated during discussions on possible merger

By RILEY HUSKEY
MISSOURIAN REPORTER

With all say "I's" and "neighs" and "whoas," the Board of Regents meeting began Wednesday.

The two main topics for discussion: the fine arts addition and the UM system merger.

An estimated $2 million addition to the Charles Johnson Fine Arts building was finally discussed today with a board full of concerned looks and awkward pauses.

Project Fine Arts could be done in the summer of 2005 if the board can find a way to budget the huge project. The addition would be a one-floor triangular building set directly southeast of the Fine Arts building and would house the University's pottery, ceramic and welding classes.

Currently located in the pit, or basement, of the Fine Arts building, the kilns are actually in violation of EPA standards. Return air comes in from the basement, where smoke from the kilns and welding circulate to all of the rooms upstairs. In addition to that, these are both fire hazards as well.

After 15 minutes of discussion, the board pressed on to the bigger issue: Northwest's proposed merger with the University of Missouri system.

"This is a huge move, no questions about it," Northwest President Dean Hubbard said. "And please see 'Merger' page 5A

WHERE DO YOU DRAW THE LINE?: THE DEMAND TO SUCCEED AT THE COLLEGIATE LEVEL BRINGS CONSEQUENCES, HARMFUL ACTIONS

By PETE GUTSCHENRITTER
CHIEF REPORTER

On a hot July day in Waco, Texas, college athletics changed. Everything changed.

And when former Baylor University basketball player Carlton Dotson was indicted for the slaying of teammate and roommate Patrick Dennehy, everyone was left wondering: "Is this what college athletics have come to?"

Northwest athletic director Bob Boerigter was one of those people.

"I wish we wouldn't have to have this discussion," Boerigter said.

Closer to home, University of Missouri-Columbia's basketball program has also been under scrutiny. Allegations claim former point guard Ricky Clemons received cash and clothing and cheated on exams while attending Missouri.

Over the last five years, various universities have been under scrutiny for NCAA violations, lack of discipline for coaches and athletes, or, in Baylor's case, murder.

So, consequently, the question has to be asked: Where do you draw the line between wanting to win and cheating to win?

"It's not quite as black and white as people would say," Boerigter said. "That's what makes it very, very difficult to uncover."

During his tenure at Northwest, Boerigter said his department tries to sniff out violations.

"In a number of meetings that I've been at here at Northwest, we often say, 'Does this pass the straight face test?'" Boerigter said. "Obviously, if it doesn't pass the straight face test, then you shouldn't be doing it."

Baylor's program is forced to start over

The athletic department at Baylor may have needed "a straight face test" at one point. But as the events unfolded, so did the staff as athletic director Tom Stanton and head basketball coach Dave Bliss both resigned.

Once Dennehy's body was discovered in a small field in Waco on July 25, Bliss's name began to surface. As a result, the NCAA is investigating the program, citing illicit payment of players' tuition.

"The bad thing about all of this for me is that what happened at Baylor has shed a light over all college athletics, whether it be a Division I program, a Division II program or a Division III program," Boerigter said. "Everyone is looking at each other's programs, asking, 'What's going on over there?'"

MU scandal hits home for Boerigter

As Clemons' name streamed across ESPN last Spring, Boerigter was leery. It was not because of the charges his ex-girlfriend filed, but because of his background.

Please see 'Athletic' page 5A

As athletics get more and more competitive, schools are facing the question of where to draw the line between wanting to win and cheating to win.

Handheld devices reintroduce third-graders to technology

By STEPHANIE STANGL
MISSOURIAN REPORTER

Despite the fact that a good majority of the world does not own one, two weeks ago, each student in Amy Vorderbruegge's third grade class was equipped with a $270 Palm Pilot.

The project to place a Palm Pilot in each of her student's hands was Vorderbruegge's idea. Vorderbruegge and Horace Mann's principal Rebecca Belcher sought funds from Northwest to purchase 24 Palm Pilots.

"It was truly my interest," Vorderbruegge said. "I wanted more infusion of technology in my classroom."

The Palm Pilots offer an extensive list of activities for the students. Students can utilize the notepad to write or use free downloaded software to make anything from a food chain to a diagram of the parts of a plant.

With Palm Pilots, students can reap the traditional benefits of computers, such as improving typing skills and developing knowledge of research processes, as well as picking up a few new tricks.

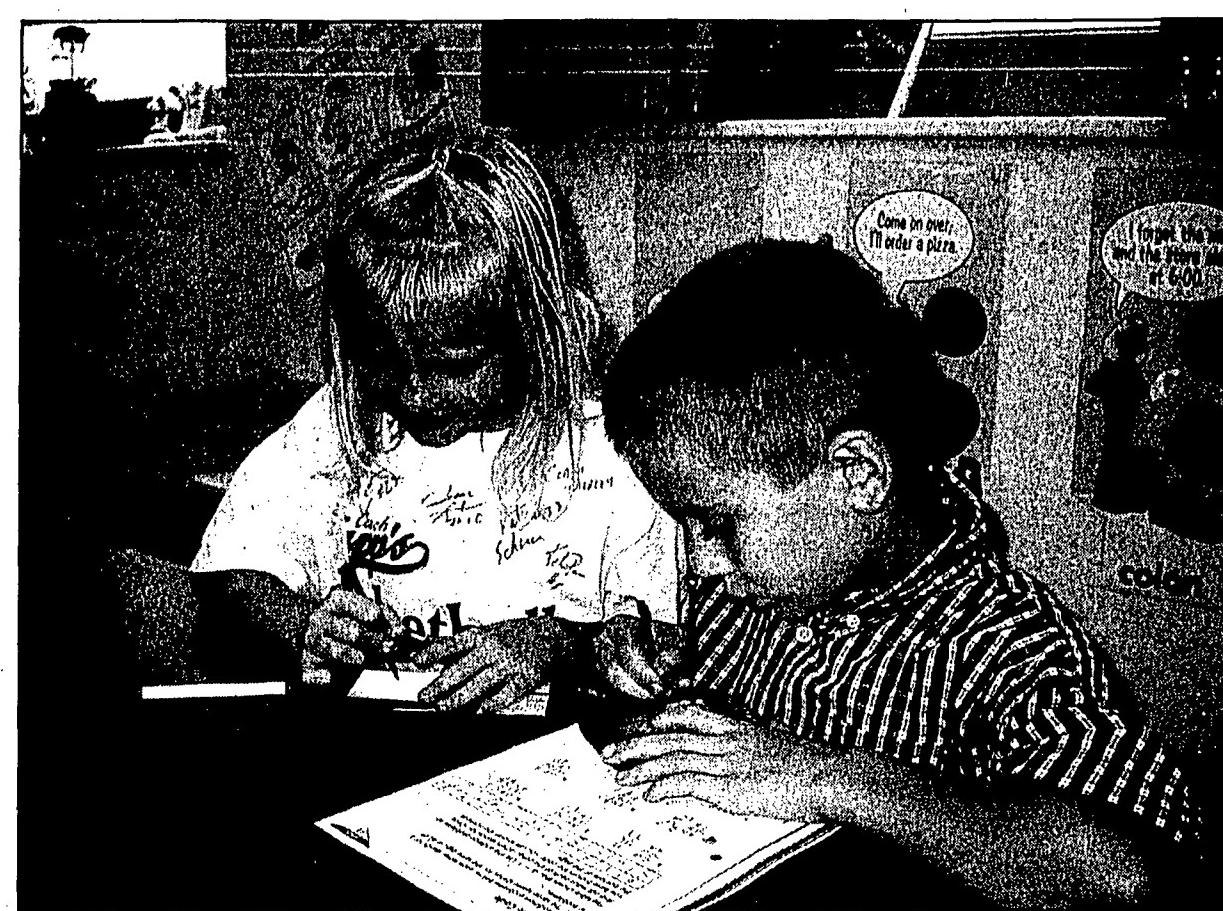

Students are learning a new language called "Graffiti," which are the symbols drawn on the Palm Pilot screen that translate to text.

Because Graffiti mimics drawing and is more entertaining, most students use this system as opposed to keyboards, which are also available.

The children used the Palm Pilots to write their parents letters the first week of school at Parents' Night. With a chuckle, Vorderbruegge noted that when the parents were asked to write

"What I have seen is motivation. The students are more motivated to do things when I say we are going to use Palms."

reply letters, a majority had no idea how to begin.

Both the children and the parents signed an agreement before the Palm Pilots were issued. If they are lost, damaged, or stolen, the student's family is responsible for all costs incurred.

With technology changing daily, it is hard to tell this early in the program if this will be feasible in years to come. The M-515 models that the students are currently using have already been surpassed technologically.

According to Vorderbruegge, the greatest reward of having these in class is not something that can be graded.

"What I have seen is motivation," Vorderbruegge said. "The students are more motivated to do things when I say we are going to use Palms."

She went on to say that students actually run in and look around for the Palm Pilots on their desks in the morning and request to use them as often as possible.

Principal starts anew at campus elementary school

By JANE PHILIP
MISSOURIAN REPORTER

After changes in education leadership, Horace Mann welcomes new director Dr. Rebecca Belcher.

Carole Edmonds directed Horace Mann for over seven years and has now taken another position as director of field experiences.

"It was a time in my career that I needed to make a career change," said Edmonds.

After being a principal for more than 17 years, Edmonds now manages the placement of student teachers and student interns in schools.

Edmonds worked with Rebecca Belcher to help her make the transition into Horace Mann.

"She is very eager to become acquainted with day-to-day activities at Horace Mann," said Edmonds.

Dr. Belcher has over 20 years of experience in public school education. She has established, founded and directed a private school for children in a gospel singing group that traveled throughout the United States and Canada. She also was a principal at a public school in New Mexico. After teaching four years at Lincoln University in Jefferson City she applied for the position at Horace Mann.

After careers working with both elementary and college-aged students, Horace Mann principal Rebecca Belcher's experience has proven her a success in the position.

"To be able to work with college students as well as elementary-aged children was kind of a blending of both parts of my career," Belcher said.

Belcher has worked in both settings and is looking forward to the Horace Mann environment mixed with college and elementary students.

"So far it has been very exciting; the teachers are wonderful and the students are great," Belcher said. "I think it is going to be a great year."

Senator secures airport funding

By SARAH SWEDBERG
CHIEF REPORTER

A Missouri senator secured more than half a million dollars of federal appropriations for the City of Maryville's economic development project.

Last Thursday, Senator Kit Bond succeeded in getting approval from the U.S. Senate Appropriations Committee for $89 million in federal funding for numerous high-priority Missouri projects and needs.

The City of Maryville will receive $600,000 for its economic development project. The economic development project includes the expansion of the Maryville Memorial airport. Soon, Maryville Memorial Airport will become the Northwest Missouri Regional Airport of Maryville.

According to a Missouri Department of Transportation press release, MoDOT director Henry Hungerbeeler said they are very pleased to be funding these improvement projects for aviation facilities throughout Missouri.

"Airports are important to our smaller communities for travel and economic development," Hungerbeeler said. "This money will allow MoDOT to work with the communities for travel and economic development."

The funding is generated from aviation user fees on airline tickets and from the sale of aviation fuel. However, the funding will not come from general tax revenue, and it will only be used for aviation projects.

Missouri is one of the nine states that currently administers federal aviation funding to the airports across the state under the State Block Grant Program. The $16 million is the largest grant amount Missouri has received since it began administering the block grant program in 1989.

Currently, legislation must still be approved by the full U.S. Senate and approved by the U.S. House of Representatives before becoming law with the president's signature. The $89 million earmarked for Missouri will be administered during fiscal year 2004.

Runners ready for rubber

By JESSICA SWARTZ
MISSOURIAN REPORTER

The arrival of Maryville High School's new track is highly anticipated, but by no one more than girl's track coach Grant Hageman.

"I am definitely excited to get going with this new track," said Hageman. "I'm looking forward to having a high amount of athletes try out."

According to Hageman, the state of the old track limited the amount of meets that were held in Maryville in previous years. He believes that aspects cut down on the number of students that attended the meets and cheered on the athletes and participated in the events.

"Some spots on the track weren't usable," said Hageman. "Most of the girls on last year's team suffered from shin splints, so this rubberized track is a relief."

Maryville High School student Dana Demott said that her peers experienced problems when running for gym class.

"When the freshmen run the mile every other day, people would get shin splints," Demott said. "There were big holes in it."

Athletic director Tom Adams believes the installation of the new track will help all of the athletic programs.

The surface of the track will have a black rubberized base with a red structural spray, similar to Northwest's track.

The construction is currently going on, and the track is expected to be completed by early November. Herzog and Loch Sand Construction are working together to complete the project.

Survivors plan walk for a cure

By SARAH SWEDBERG

Several ugly queens like Guy Ebersole will put on make up, wigs and women's clothing to walk for a cause during Relay for Life this weekend.

Many participants, like Lisa Smeltzer, the daughter of former Northwest professor Jim Smeltzer, will be walking to honor and remember cancer survivors and victims.

"It's powerful to see everyone together working toward the same goal," Elaine Hale, a Relay for Life participant on First Christian Church's team said.

Thousands of community members and Northwest students will gather for Relay for Life's Stars and Stripes Under the Moonlight at Beal Park. "It's a great way to show that cancer is there, and they're still searching for a cure," Kim Nielson, team captain for Hy-Vee's Relay for Life team said.

Each Relay for Life team will sponsor a different activity, including the ugly queen contest in which Guy Ebersole, another team member from First Christian Church, is participating.

Males from each team will dress up in drag to try to raise money. The drag queen who raises the most money will be crowned in a ceremony Nielson said.

It's interesting to see how creative people can be to raise money," Ebersole said.

Each team will also participate in a scavenger hunt.

Eula Mares, Relay for Life participant, said the Maryville community always does a good job of raising money for the event, raising more than St. Joseph. All proceeds will go to the American Cancer Society, but Hale said most of what is collected stays in Nodaway County.

Last year, Maryville raised more than $75,000 according to Ebersole. The Maryville community raises money for the event by donations from local businesses, community members and family members and friends of each participant.

Hy-Vee has sold paper links to make a chain of life to raise money. They also have had two strawberry pie sales and a dinner to raise money. Community members may also purchase luminaries for $10 to honor or remember someone who battled with cancer.

A ceremony Saturday evening will display all the luminaries purchased. Last year, 3,500 luminaries shined during the event.

"Everyone tears up during the candlelight ceremony," Nielson said. "It's a great way to remember or honor (cancer survivors and victims)."

Relay for Life participants expect several thousand people to attend the event. Mares, expects 45 to 50 teams of 10 to 15 people to walk and many more to attend the activities scheduled.

"Relay for Life is only second to (Nodaway County) fair," Mares said.

A speech will be given in honor of cancer survivors Saturday night. Then cancer survivors will walk one lap at Beal Park's parking lot. They will also receive a free Relay for Life T-shirt, cake, punch and a gift. The gift will be a rock that cancer survivors will pass on to people battling with cancer.

A group of girls between the ages of 7 and 12 will perform Saturday night in memory of Carolyn Elswick who recently passed away from cancer Mares said.

Hy-Vee will provide refreshments and food, and Hy-Vee greeter Fred Mares will be the DJ for the event.

Awards and prizes will be given away to the team with the best spirit, best decorated camp site and the team that walks the most laps.

The Relay for Life will culminate in a closing ceremony Sunday morning.

Re-enactments in Skidmore showcase Civil War era

By CLARK GRELL

Rod Archdekin hit the only home run on the day, but he rounded the bases in an unusual style.

In the late-summer heat, Archdekin swung at the ball wearing wool clothing typical of the 1800s, but he was not the only one.

The St. Joseph native—along with several others from Missouri and surrounding states—showcased life back in the 1800s in an authentic Civil War-era baseball game as well other things such as battle re-enactments at Skidmore's annual Freedom Festival last weekend.

"I really like the romance of the era," Archdekin said. "I'm not what you call a radical for the South or the North, but I do like the era. I like the characteristics of the individuals. I think it's a characteristic that's lacking today."

There was no organization of teams, nor was the number of base runners that tapped home plate kept, but that did not take away the fun of the game, or the competitiveness, for that matter.

"Hit it, Joe! Come on Joe. You ain't got it," one of the outfielders yelled to the batter.

"For the Civil War soldiers, 99 percent of the time, it was boredom, and the other one percent was pure fight and actual battles," said Chuck Cortesio, Kevin Stingley takes a quick nap between innings as fellow re-enactor Chuck Cortesio watches their team take the field. The two men traveled to Skidmore as members of the 3rd and 10th Missouri Infantries to participate in the Freedom Fest.

who made the trip from Centerville, Iowa, to take part in the re-enactments. "To relieve the boredom, you had to find something to do, and baseball was very popular back then."

This was the first year the Freedom Fest featured re-enactments of the Civil War era.

The festival went on as it has for many years, having veterans speak, a motorcycle show and food vendors. However, to the edge of the section blocked off for the festival were tents set up to represent the living conditions of one of America's most controversial eras.

Those that took part in the re-enactments were of Crowley's 3rd Missouri Infantry, the DSA 21st Missouri Infantry and the 10th Missouri Infantry. They dressed up as Union and Confederate soldiers and showcased two battles Saturday.

Dressed in wool clothing and everything else from a hat worn into battles to long dresses of the era, the men and women gave a visual and moving picture of what happened more than 100 years ago.

"Most of us do it to show what it was like in that time period," said Sherman Dodd of Liberty. "There are many people who want to see this time period erased, and that's the wrong thing to do."

It's not all about the Freedom Fest in Skidmore either. Most of the participants will do Civil War re-enactments several times a year. Cortesio said he does re-enactments in nine states every year.

"Seeing the actual reproduction equipment and clothing is impressive," Cortesio said. "The people that come out of their houses come because they want to. They want to see something different."

For others such as Archdekin, who has been doing re-enactments for 14 years, it's a time of coming together with people that share the same trait.

"My favorite part of this is the camaraderie of the people who have similar interests," he said. Clark Grell can be contacted at 562-1224 or cgrell@missourianonline.com

All-Weather Fans

As the long-awaited day approaches for the home opener of Bearcat football, loyal and sane fans are key for a successful season

When Northwest gets set to take the field this Saturday, they will do so in a renovated Rickenbrode Stadium, and with an 0-1 record.

If they drop another game to Minnesota State-Mankato University, which The Missourian staff highly doubts, we are pleading for the fans to avoid another repeat of the 2001 season when the student section had fewer people than a high school game. The last two games at Rickenbrode, any student could have walked in at kick-off and had their choice of seat because of the 'Cats "poor" record.

They ended up 7-4, poor by Northwest standards, but certainly not anything to cry about.

We may be jumping to conclusions, but at times, the student body has proven to be a fair-weather fan.

Students are always eager to show up and cheer when the 'Cats are beating rival teams, but as soon as a few tallies show up in the "L" column, the students stop coming. The women's basketball team is another perfect example of this trend.

True Bearcat fans will support the team no matter the record.

What's the difference between showing up in the stands already intoxicated or sitting at home watching football on the couch intoxicated? It seems to us that going to the game would be much more fun.

Secondly, if the student section is going to cheer, then that is great, and we personally encourage you to yell as loud as you can. Leave with a hoarse voice. If anything, it will give you an excuse to not have to talk in class until Wednesday.

But do not make the degrading comments. It really does nothing but motivate the other team to play harder, and it makes us look like dumb, uneducated fans, a rap that seems more suitable for our neighbors to the south of us.

There is such a thing as being a great fan without degrading the other team. Some of the greatest, most knowledgeable college fans of all time are also some of the nicest, so you can help the team without degrading the opponent.

If the student body shows up on Saturday, it can do two things to help the Bearcats try and bring home a win. They can cheer as loud as they possibly can, and, most importantly, they can be smart about the way they do it.

Need to vent?

"McDonald's drive-thru workers really need to stop hitting on their college-aged customers. Just gimme my damn change and fries, okay?"

Run-in with cops proves too friendly

Tight jeans and short shirts are worn to attract college boys, not Maryville Public Safety officers on duty.

At least this was what I assumed until this weekend when I heard a man holler "You girls want to get in our car and play with us?" and then drove away in a Public Safety vehicle with another officer.

Here's how the situation unfolded. My friend Kara and I were walking down an alley back to our friend's house that eventually required us to cross a street. We looked left and saw nothing and then looked right and saw headlights so we stopped.

We waited a minute until we saw the car stop in front of us and heard someone yell, "Go ahead, girls."

We crossed the street and waved to what appeared to be, at first glance in the dark, a friendly Maryville citizen giving the pedestrian the right of way.

As we reached the other side of the street we hear more yells from the vehicle, this time not so polite.

"You girls want to get in our car and play with us?"

We turn around, assuming we'd see a couple of drunk college guys hanging out their window waving, but much to our surprise, we saw two Maryville police officers drive away in a Public Safety vehicle.

We turn to each other with jaws dropped, not knowing what to do next. We looked around and asked the guy who was in front of us if he'd heard the same thing and, sure enough, he started laughing and said, "Dude, those cops just hit on you."

Are you kidding me? We went an entire night and hardly got hit on at all by college guys and then by crossing a street we somehow pick up two unprofessional police officers.

Granted, those comments wouldn't have been appreciated from a couple of drunk college guys either, but they were weren't appropriate from two men whose job is to keep the streets free from the violators that they had become to us.

Obviously unable to keep this story to myself, I get home the next day and relay the previous night's events to my neighbors. They're surprised but not shocked because, amazingly enough they had experienced an interesting run-in with the Public Safety department themselves.

Their story was much of the same, filled with inappropriate comments from men who were put into a place of power because they were dedicated to making Maryville a safe environment.

In closing, I want to make it clear that these statements from the Maryville Public Safety this weekend don't equal up to the professionalism that I've witnessed during previous interviews and interactions that I've had with them. I understand that the entire department was not involved with what occurred, which is why I don't want to make any general conclusions. I just felt it was important to make aware what is occurring behind the badges of some Maryville Public Safety officers.

Seniors receive national awards for Greek involvement

By RILEY HUSKEY
MISSOURIAN REPORTER

Two model Greeks.
Two unique individuals.

Seniors Logan Lightfoot and Keri Kemmerer have not only won prestigious awards for their academic achievements and active involvement in Greek life but for their can-do attitudes toward life.

"I have been blessed with amazing people in my life that have shown me so much by the way they approach life," said Logan Lightfoot, the 2003 Phi Sigma Kappa National Man of the Year. "The two most influential people in my life are my mom and dad. They continue to be so much more than parents to me; they're my role models."

Wilma Wilson Sharp Scholarship winner Keri Kemmerer also admires her parents for their continued support and encouragement.

"I wouldn't be as involved here at Northwest if it wasn't for them," Kemmerer said.

Logan Lightfoot served as Phi Sigma Kappa president from 2001 to 2003 and also served in such positions as Executive Secretary, IFC Delegate, and Fund-raising Chairman for the Phi Sig house. Other activities for Lightfoot include Student Ambassador President (2001-2002), Alpha Omega Society President (2000-2002), Mortar Board, Sigma Tau Delta, and TEAM Leadership Board of Directors.

"God has done some amazing things in my life," Lightfoot said. "He has blessed me with some amazing gifts, and my main drive for success is to use those gifts for Him."

2002-2003 Alpha Sigma Alpha President Keri Kemmerer also has a long list of activities and honors. In addition to serving as the president, she also acted as secretary and file chairperson for the house. Other activities include Mortar Board, Order of Omega, Alpha Chi National Honor Society, Phi Eta Sigma, Alpha Omega Society, Wind Symphony and Head Start.

"I like the support of others, but I'm pretty self-motivated and independently driven," Kemmerer said. "I've grown up with the phrase, 'It's not only what you can do, but what you can do for others.' And that's pretty much how I live my life."

Lightfoot had some words to live by as well. "My favorite quote," said Lightfoot, "would be, 'Everyone has the same 24 hours in a day—it's how you use those 24 hours that determines how much you succeed.' No matter how much I have on my plate at any particular time, I try to use those 24 hours to their maximum potential."

Both seniors are planning to graduate in December of this year and go on to become teachers. Kemmerer will hopefully be starting in Kansas City as an early developmental elementary teacher, and Lightfoot plans to begin high school English education after graduate school.

Several questions still surround Nodaway county's top criminal case

"It's not a forgotten case; in fact, it's our top case," said Ben Espy, Nodaway County Sheriff. "We're working almost daily and still conducting follow-up interviews, and we continue to find new leads. The case just keeps getting bigger."

Formal charges have yet to be filed against chief suspect Jack Wayne Rogers in the disappearance of Perry, who vanished from his Skidmore home April 11, 2001. He currently remains in the Morgan County Jail awaiting Oct. 27 federal trial in Jefferson City for child pornography charges.

While summer searches for Perry's remains yielded no results, Espy said his department, who is assisting the Missouri State Highway Patrol and FBI in the investigation, continues to actively exhaust all leads.

"A body has not been found, and we're now not going any further until we receive more leads on where to look," Espy said. "Our ultimate goal is to get enough information and information that we can get criminal charges filed on this."

Rogers, a 58-year-old former church youth counselor from Fulton, Mo., was named as a suspect in April when confiscation of his computer revealed chat-room conversations that graphically detailed Perry's kidnapping, torture and murder at a secluded area near the Ozarks. Within the conversations, Rogers also wrote of having seen pleas for Perry's safe return on the Internet and at a Skidmore gas station. He then boasted that authorities would never find Perry because he had "disposed of the body in such a way that it would never be found." Authorities have not dismissed the claims as fantasy because the comments made in the online chat "reference several facts that would only be known by Jack Rogers through direct contact with Branson Perry," according to investigating affidavits.

Within the chat, Rogers also alluded to the torture and slaying of numerous other male victims ranging in age from early teens to mid-40s. Espy confirmed that the possibility of multiple murders is plausible and is also under active investigation.

Sgt. David Merrill, highway patrol criminal Investigator for the Division of Drug and Crime Control and lead investigator for the case, said that, if charges are filed, the trial could take place in Nodaway County, where Perry was last seen alive, or, if sufficient evidence is found, in central Missouri.

"It could be in several different places," Merrill said. "It could be anywhere that any part of the crime is found to be committed, or if that's not determined, where he lived."

Last spring's break in the bizarre case came unexpectedly for law enforcement, who had previously linked Perry's disappearance to alleged involvement with the local drug trade. It's also brought a degree of acceptance to those closest to the shy, natural athlete who dreamed of one day joining the Army.

"We had always had ideas of what had happened to him, but it was way off from this," said Joann Stinnett, Perry's grandmother. "We just didn't dream of somebody ever doing something like this."

Stinnett, who was among the last to see Perry before his disappearance, initially contacted authorities after not seeing or hearing from her grandson for two days. Immediately suspecting foul play, she tied yellow ribbons around the trees at her Skidmore home in hopes of his return. The ribbons—and her hope—have long since faded, but the pain hasn't.

"They say time heals everything, but you just get to thinking about it and talking about it, and it's just like yesterday," she said, fighting back tears. "I wish there would be a way that Mr. Rogers could be put to death the way he put Branson to death. To me, a shot is too easy. That's nothing."

Stinnett's pain is among the main motivations in the search for closure in a perplexing case, Espy said.

"It'd be nice to put an end to this, not only for us, but for his family," he said. "When it's all done, it will be unbelievable. That's how big this case is."

Merger still tops on minds of Regents when you get to the level of discussion we're at, the devil is always in the details."

Hubbard had an interesting simile on the subject.

"It's like a marriage," he said. "You have to stand back at the end of the day and put all the pieces together."

A lot of the discussion at the Board of Regents meeting revolved around what policies would be put into effect when or if Northwest joined the UM system. One point Hubbard expressed his wish to maintain the uniqueness and culture that Northwest has worked so hard to create.

"We're fine as a stand-alone institution," Hubbard said. "If nothing is going to change, we have no need to worry. I really don't care, honest to goodness. This is the entire board's decision, not mine."

Despite the laid-back atmosphere and a room full of Northwest representatives, tension could be sensed within the board itself.

"Communication is overwhelmingly bad with this board and the UM system," said board member Lydia Hunt. "I personally need more feedback then what I'm receiving, and I have questions that need answers."

Looks of disgust were made and James D. Johnson jumped to Hubbard's defense.

"Dean can't tell you anything if he doesn't know anything," Johnson said. "He can't say anything unless he has concrete answers."

After a moment of rest, Hubbard answered, "I know there are pages full of questions, but they'll take a long time to answer. This merger is by far the largest hurdle Northwest has to jump."

Despite the conflict at this meeting, a survey of faculty members showed that 70 percent are in favor of the merger with 13 percent against and 17 percent undecided.

On October 15th, Hubbard will invite 14 alumni from the UM system to campus for a meeting on specific policies that will go into effect in years to come.

want to keep students aware and free to voice their opinions on things such as the UM system merger and be able to voice their opinion."

Student Senate would like to know what the students think about campus issues and productivity on campus. Student Senate devised a system where students can comment on their performance or on what they would like to see changed in Student Senate and on campus.

"On our Web site we have a comment card system. We would love to know what issues the students are facing," Dix said. "The students don't even have to sign their name. They can sign it anonymous. They are also welcome to come sit in senate meetings."

The first event that student senate is sponsoring is a student-faculty forum next Thursday Sept. 18, in the J.W. Jones Student Union.

"President Dean Hubbard, Vice President of Student Affairs Kent Porterfield as well as myself, will be present at the open discussion pertaining to questions about the merger. We want to make students and faculty aware of issues and grant them the opportunity to ask questions," Dix said.

Student Senate has big plans for this school year, and plans to fulfill the needs of its students here at Northwest.

"Student Senate is here to represent all students," Dix said. "We hope that all students feel free and are welcome to come join us in our meetings."

Unusual Energy

Using cardboard and paper to create steam, a ground-breaking program saves the University thousands of dollars every year.

1. After the paper and cardboard is "pelletized," it's then stored or shipped to the power plant to be burned, depending on the University's power needs. 2. When the pellets or wood chips are ready to be burned, they're sent through a large auger to be transferred to the furnace. 3. An intricate set of conveyer belts are then used to transport the pellets to the furnace. 4. This furnace burns at about 13,000 degrees Fahrenheit and super-heats specially treated water to create steam. The furnace produces about 20,000 pounds of steam pressure per hour. 5. The entire process creates two byproducts. The first is ash, which the University uses for on-campus construction. The other is water vapor that runs at about 10 percent emission, which is well below the EPA-mandated 30 percent.

Poop for Power

University's woodchip energy program will soon add animal waste

By AARON BAILEY
MISSOURIAN REPORTER

Residence halls around campus will soon be air-conditioned by animal manure.

In six to 12 months, the University will integrate a new form of alternative energy in the form of animal waste.

"We're in the process of working on a blend most conducive for making (an animal waste) pellet," said Arley Larson, associate professor of agriculture.

The technology for the use of animal manure as energy has been around for years. Due to technological design flaws at the University's farm, limited staff and a slow process of obtaining permits from the Department for Natural Resources, the integration has been slow, according to Ray Counter, vice president of Finance.

In spite of these limitations, the University has implemented an alternative energy program that is one of a kind. Wood chips and paper pellets are turned into energy.

"We're probably the only (university) on the North American continent with a program like this," Counter said. "There are probably others, but on a much smaller scale."

About 80 percent of Northwest's power needs are met by using alternative energy.

"The No. 1 goal is to have reduced energy costs compared to the mainstream approach for energy, such as coal or natural gas," Counter said.

According to Counter, the alternative energy project is projected to save the University around $500,000 this year and a total of around $7 million dollars since the program has been in place.

The savings are calculated by comparing what is spent on pelletizing the paper to the cost of natural gas.

The University's power plant burns both timber byproduct and recycled paper to create steam that is used to cool and heat the entire campus, as opposed to using natural gas.

The timber byproduct, or wood chips, are shipped from all over the northwest Missouri area from various industries, such as saw mills and furniture manufacturers.

Recycled paper from both the campus and the city of Maryville is "pelletized" or condensed into chalk-sized bits at the pellet plant located just north of Donaldson's Sport Complex. The paper pellets are then shipped to the power plant, located north of Wells Hall, to be burned.

So, instead of paying a vendor to haul off the recycled paper, as the University does with its plastic and glass, it's dealt with on campus to save money.

The University is also looking to incorporate the alternative energy project into the classroom.

"There's just so much of this that is teachable," Counter said.

stadium," assistant athletic director Mark Clements said. "Not very often do you get an opportunity to see a renovation of this size."

One of the main changes to the stadium this season is the addition of 3,000 outdoor seats. No longer will fans be forced to stand for games like last season's match against Central Missouri State University.

The press box is another major thing changed by the renovations. Gone are the days of reporters being cramped into a small space. The Northwest Cellular Press Suite can now house 30 members of the

All signs of those are gone now though, and the $5 million renovation has been all but completed, creating a stadium that favorably compares to any stadium in the MIAA or Division II football.

"The athletic department is really excited about the new media more than comfortably, and with internet access.

With all the changes, there is one concern members of the athletic department have with Saturday's opening.

"We are trying to figure out some traffic patterns with fans coming into the game," Clements said. "With the Sprint Fan Zone being in College Park, we don't know how people are going to come in and out. We just want people to come out to the game."

Even though the athletic department does not want to tell anyone any certain way to come in, they did have one request.

"We would like for our reserved ticket holders to come in on the west side," Clement said. "I think they will get the flavor and the excitement of the new stadium when they walk in and see the field on the way to their seats."

A change for all students this year is the way that they enter the game. Last season students simply had to show their identification at the gate to get in. This season fans need to go to the ticket booth, have their identification run through the ticket machine, and then, a ticket will be issued, free of charge.

Bearcats turn focus to Mankato, trick plays

No. 18 'Cats hope to pick up first win of young season

By COLE YOUNG
SPORTS EDITOR

If the dedication of Rickenbrode Stadium wasn't reason enough to get the Bearcats excited for the home opener on Saturday, they have plenty of reasons now.

After dropping their season opener to South Dakota State University 20-0, the Bearcats are turning their focus toward trying to rebound from their first shutout in 80 games and avoid their first 0-2 start since 1995.

Their opponent, University of Minnesota-Mankato, plans on bringing a plethora of formations and tactics in hopes of handing the Bearcats their second loss.

If the Mavericks can throw a weird formation at the Bearcats, they plan to. In the past, the Mavericks have tried such things as five wide receiver sets and the swinging gate—a formation that puts the quarterback and center on one side of the field while the rest of the team lines up on the opposite side.

The element of surprise seems to be what Mankato head coach Clarence Holley is going to do, but Northwest head coach Mel Tjeerdsma does not seem fooled.

"A trick play really isn't any good if there is no surprise to it," Tjeerdsma said.

An ornate offense is not the only thing Mankato brings to the table. The Mavericks' defense brings the same type of surprise plays that the offense does.

"Defensively, they give you lots of different looks," Tjeerdsma said. "Last year, they had people moving before the snap of the ball. They will do a lot of that again. It's one of those things where you know they are going to make some plays, but, at the same time, you know you are going to make plays, too. You just have to make a lot more plays than they do."

COMEBACK 'CATS: Team scores three goals in final half for MIAA win

Northwest defeats Blues despite trailing at half

By COLE YOUNG
SPORTS EDITOR

For the first 65 minutes of yesterday's home opener for the Northwest soccer team, it appeared that Washburn might get its first conference win as a new program.

Then a combination of freshmen and wind took over.

After playing the first half of the game into a stiff southerly wind, Northwest trailed the Lady Blues 1-0. With the wind at their backs though, the Bearcats controlled the pitch on their way to a 3-1 win.

The first Bearcat to get on the board was freshman Beth Gutschner, who scored a goal in the 65th minute to tie the game.

Nine minutes later, Emily Perkins put another ball in the net for what would be the game-winning goal. Before the Blues could recover, Becky Marston added another goal to close the scoring column.

"I was just glad to get it going," Gutschner said. "(The goal) gave us a little bit of confidence."

Early in the game, Northwest had their chances to score, but with the strong wind in their face they had trouble getting any power behind their shots.

Once the Bearcats adjusted to the wind in the second half, they allowed Washburn across midfield less than 10 times.

In the first half, our performance was shaky, just like the wind," head coach Tracey Cross said. "In the second half, the thing that changed us around was we got a little more compact and had better possessions."

Aside from the win, Cross felt like the play of the freshmen stood out. The first two goals scored in the game were by freshmen. In addition to the scoring, freshman goalkeeper Alison Sheridan allowed only one goal.

"It's nice to see them go up there and take a shot," Cross said. "It's great to see them take on the leadership roles on the field."

Pelzer: 'I expect this to be a hard-fought game'

a lot better if we're up 28 points at halftime," he said. "But I always feel, if it is close at halftime, then we've got a great chance to win because of the factor of fresh guys against tired guys."

That's exactly what the 'Hounds did last Friday against Glenwood, Iowa. They kept the game close (6-3 after the third quarter) and then rattled off 23 fourth quarter points for the 29-3 win.

Pelzer said Oak Grove has about eight players that play both sides of the ball, which could play into the 'Hounds' hands.

"One big difference is they are playing some kids both ways," he said. "I'm hoping we keep the game close, and our conditioning should win out in the second half."

To do that, the 'Hounds will expect another big game from senior running backs Bryce Buholt and Brant Gregg. Both players combined to rush for more than 200 yards last year in Maryville's 33-6 win over Oak Grove in the 'Hound Pound.'

Some thought it was surprising that the 'Hounds won so comfortably against the Panthers, and they are not expecting the same thing this year.

"Every time we approach a team, it's like they're a brand new team," junior defensive end Keith Starr said. "We don't even look at last year because they are a whole new team."

A solid win over Glenwood last week did not go without concerns. The 'Hounds were hampered with first half turnovers and penalties throughout the game, something that Pelzer wants improved.

"(Oak Grove) is a winnable game if we go in there with the right mindset and execute and cut down on our mistakes," he said.

The 'Hounds will likely deal with a solid passing game from Oak Grove. The Panthers are more of an I-formation team, running wrap-around draws, trip and trap plays.

"They do some things pretty well," Pelzer said. "So, I imagine they will be ready for us."

Starting quarterback T.J. Mandl goes through the paces during a pre-season practice. Mandl started last week against South Dakota State and head coach Mel Tjeerdtsma announced Mandl will start in the home opener against Minnesota-Mankato on Saturday.

CONTINUED FROM 1B 'Cats and Mavs will battle for first win

In order for Northwest to beat Mankato, they are going to have to take advantage of the Mavericks less-than-stellar rushing defense. In their first two games, Mankato has allowed an average of 156 yards per game on the ground.

In the season opener, the Bearcats rushed for 90 yards total. Shon Wells led the Bearcats with 56 yards on 17 carries. The more glaring problem for Northwest, though, was their inability to score inside the red zone. Against SDSU, Northwest had eight tries inside the Jacks' 10-yard line and were unable to score on any of them.

In addition to the improvements in the red zone, Tjeerdtsma has another area the Bearcats need to improve.

The other thing that has caused some fans concern is who will be the starting quarterback. According to Tjeerdtsma, Mandl will be the man to start again for the Bearcats in their home opener.

"I think T.J. played well this weekend. We had three turnovers, but we have had a lot more turnovers than that in a game before. More than anything else, we need a sense of urgency for this week's game," he said. "That will correct most of the mistakes we had."

0-No; Bearcats shutout

By COLE YOUNG
SPORTS EDITOR

The last time Northwest ended a game with one of these, starting quarterback T.J. Mandl was a high school sophomore.

The Bearcats were shut out for the first time since November 16, 1996, when Pittsburg State University beat them 40-0.

Northwest had their chances to score in their 20-0 loss to South Dakota State University in Brookings, S.D.

In the second half, Northwest was given eight chances to score inside the SDSU 10-yard line but failed to convert on every try.

"We showed signs the whole night that we have spark in the offense," said senior center Geoff Bollinger. "We can move the ball on a good defense. Finishing the drives is the key. The previous Northwest squads have had good goal-line squads. That is something we need to work on."

After both teams stalled on their first offensive series, Mandl fumbled on a run inside the SDSU ten with under five minutes to go in the first quarter.

"I was carrying it with one hand," Mandl said. "I probably should have covered it up with two. The guy came from behind me and knocked it out."

The Jacks capitalized on the fumble by driving 85 yards in six plays, culminating in a 32-yard strike from quarterback Brad Nelson to receiver Josh Davis.

The following play from scrimmage, Northwest fullback Mitch Herring put the ball on the ground.

It took just one play for Nelson to connect on a play-action pass to Solomon Johnson from 45 yards out.

Before Northwest could escape the first half, a Mandl pass found SDSU linebacker Marty Kranz.

With under 20 seconds to go in the half, the Jacks had a chance to put the Bearcats out of the game, but Davis dropped a pass in the end zone to put SDSU up by three touchdowns.

Instead, the Jacks had to settle for a field goal to put SDSU ahead 17-0 going into the break.

SDSU would put another field goal through the uprights late to finish the game with a 20-0 win.

"We've got to solve our problems," head coach Mel Tjeerdtsma said. "We can't worry about anyone else. We have to respect the guys we are playing. I felt like we had a total lack of respect. Not that we thought those guys were bad, but we thought we were going to come up here and beat these guys."

'Hounds earn 3-2 win over Benton

BY JEROME BOETTCHER
MISSOURIAN REPORTER

Down 2-1 at halftime against conference rival Benton, Maryville head coach Stuart Collins told his team to play the only way they knew how.

"I told them that we needed to play Spoofhound soccer," Collins said. "That means short touch passes, control the ball, and make sure we communicate."

Halfway through the second half, the 'Hounds tied it up. Junior captain Nic Zweifel switched it from left to right, and it rolled through the net.

"About 12 minutes into the second half, we started doing what I asked," Collins said. "They all settled down and finally played the game."

The 'Hounds then held on in order to put the game into overtime, despite not capitalizing on chances to score.

Sophomore Clay Ferguson scored the game winner minutes into overtime when a hand ball was not called on the Cardinals and the ball was passed over to Ferguson.

Ferguson was wide open and shot the ball past the Benton goalie into the right corner of the net to win the game 3-2.

"(The call) could have changed the outcome of the game, but the wind was on our side, and these guys were hungry," Collins added.

The 'Hounds had scored ten minutes into the game on a floater by senior captain Travis Smith that landed in the right side of the goal. But then, a miscommunication ten minutes later changed the momentum and allowed the Cardinals to get into the game.

"We whiffed the ball, and the communication wasn't good enough," Collins said.

'Hounds sophomore goalie Ky Hill, who was appearing in net for the first time this season, came out to get the ball but miscommunicated with his defense. The ball was kicked right by him by Benton's Tim Brown.

Then later in the half Benton struck again, this time with a shot by Andrew Fischer that hit off the bottom of the crossbar and went in behind Hill.

Collins put Hill in goal for the first time this season after junior Brian Donnelly was the goalkeeper in the first two games during the Liberty

"Ky showed us that he can play it for us, and that gave us more options,"

Collins said.

Collins said that Hill will probably be the goalie for a while. He also was very pleased with his midfield.

"Our midfielders held us together until the team came together," Collins said.

The team is now 1-2. They lost their first two games to O'Hara and Raytown South, 7-1 and 6-0, respectively. Collins said that the team was unprepared in both cases and that it was a learning experience. They will play Benton again in the Excelsior Tournament on Thursday.

"The win is huge because you're halfway to making your season level," Collins said. "On a scale of one to ten, I would give them a five because they really didn't get into gear until the second half, but I'm pleased with the win."

Losses have no effect on spikers' confidence

By CLARK GRELL
DESIGN EDITOR

Not even a night of losses can keep the Bearcats down.

After falling to South Dakota State and National American University last Friday, at a tournament in Brookings, S.D., the Northwest volleyball team headed back to the hotel and refocused for the following day.

"Friday night, we went back to the hotel and spent an hour as a team, enjoying each other's company," head coach Lori DeJongh-Slight said. "We had 15 kids in the room with us coaches laughing and having a good time talking about what we need to do to get better."

The host-team Jackrabbits won in three sets over the Bearcats, 30-24, 30-19, 30-22 and that was followed by a three-set loss to National American, 30-15, 30-26, 30-12.

in a losing effort to the Jackrabbits.

It has been play like that and the contributions of an entire team that have lead Slight enjoying going to practice every day.

"In the long run, we may not be in the top two or three in the conference this year but we are going to have a lot of fun getting there," Slight said.

Day two was not any better for the Bearcats though. They suffered three-set losses to St. Cloud State and Concordia University.

Despite the team's 2-6 mark and another tournament this weekend featuring Top 25 teams, the team is still confident about their upcoming opportunities.

"I think you have to look at it in a way of preparation," freshman Amy D'Amato said. "This is what we need to do to prepare. I'd much rather take losses and know that we have a chance to win later in the season when it counts."

Maybe the brightest spot of the 2-6 record is the play of the freshman

'Hounds win at Fairfax, drop match to Tarkio

By ANDY TIMKO
MISSOURIAN REPORTER

The Maryville High School volleyball team failed to their winning ways against Tarkio Tuesday.

"I don't know what the girls were thinking coming into tonight," head coach Heather Stoecklein said. "We didn't play as well as we did in the Fairfax tournament."

Over the weekend, the 'Hounds played in the Fairfax tournament and squashed the competition to win the championship.

The 'Hounds played matches against Fairfax and Lafayette, winning both easily in two games a piece. They then went on to beat Essex (Iowa) in two games (25-22, 25-18) for the championship and a 6-0 record.

"It was a very long day, but the girls played very well," Stoecklein said of the tournament.

Tuesday's match against Tarkio, however, proved to be more difficult than the 'Hounds anticipated.

"I think we came in thinking it was an easy win," senior Brittnay Loch said. "We didn't play well, we didn't communicate, and we didn't play as a team."

Things looked like they were going to start out well for the 'Hounds when they took a quick lead over the Indians. After a couple of miscues and a controversial call by the officials, Maryville was losing by three, in the 26-24 loss.

"Coach tried to motivate us during the timeouts," Loch said. "We just didn't play to our potential."

In the second game, the 'Hounds again took a quick lead and led most of the way. Again, a couple of controversial calls came into play, and Maryville lost their momentum for the second time.

"You can't put the game on the officials' shoulders; they are humans just like us, and mistakes are made

Your Man ponders Greek culture

Ah, the sights and sounds of September. Leaves are turning colors, the temperature is cooling off, and hundreds of freshmen girls are running around campus wearing little ribbons that set themselves apart from the rest of the campus. That's right folks. I'm talking about Fall Rush Week, a week of fun-filled bliss that will help decide the futures of many young men and women here at Northwest!

The fraternities on campus have a pretty basic way of recruiting new pledges. Open houses, where everyone is welcome, are held during the week for the guys to go meet the members and get to know the fraternity. They hang out, chat, eat and basically learn about each other. Some have invite-only events at the end of the week for the rushers that the men of the fraternity would like to have join them. Some hand out bids to join the group at these; others do this at a different time. Pretty simple, wouldn't you say? Not so much for the sororities.

Okay, so joining a sorority requires a little more time and patience. It begins with a small fee, paid at the beginning of Rush Week. Rushers get yellow ribbons and active members of the sororities are given blue ribbons. This is so they will all be able to identify one another throughout the week since they are not allowed to speak to one another outside of rush events. The rushers are divided into groups and assigned a Gamma Chi, who will lead them through their journey of self-discovery. Their pictures are taken and given to the sororities so the dissection process can begin. The girls are required to attend all events, including a tea and many rush parties. This is the only time they are allowed to speak to the active members, so words must be wisely chosen. The last day of rush, the girls attend their preferred sororities' parties. Then comes bid day.

Bid Day: sitting in a crowded room waiting for your turn to open an envelope and see if you have been accepted into the group you think is the best for you. Then you get pictures, shirts, presents and many new friends with whom you can share your life. But is this really the right choice for everyone?

Perhaps some people feel the need to join a Greek organization in order to fit in. These people are probably the ones in high school who were always part of the in crowd but were not the most popular people. These were the people who drove their friends around, bought the drinks and snacks when they went out and were generally used continuously by their friends. They wanted to fit in so badly that they would do anything for anyone to belong. Thus, they come to college, join a Greek group and suddenly have a bunch of friends surrounding them. All this for the low cost of yearly national and chapter dues, which vary from group to group.

Now don't get me wrong. There are some good points to these organizations. For example, they do provide many leadership opportunities for many people. Each group has philanthropies with which they work every year to improve people's lives. Many of the sororities appear to have a fitness program for their members because none of them are any bigger than Your Man's thumb. There is also a minimum GPA requirement to be in a Greek organization. That's right, if you want to go Greek, you must maintain a 2.5 GPA (which equals out to a C+ average for those of you who may not be very good at math). There is one sorority which only requires a 2.25, so for you ladies who can't quite keep up with the demands of college, you may still be in luck. But watch out for this group—they'll kick you out if you don't like cows.

So, ladies and gentlemen, you can pretty much tell what Your Man thinks of the Greek Life system here at Northwest: it's a great way to buy—I mean make—new friends. It does have its perks for those of you who need them. But for the rest of us, I think we can get enough perks from the local coffee shop.

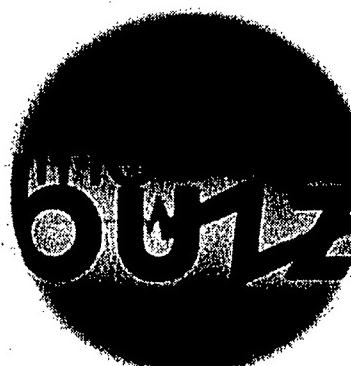

The Stroller has been a tradition since 1918 and does not reflect the views of The Northwest Missourian.
